Strong by Lambert Strether of Corrida. Song of birds of the day Another migratory bird. This is really precious. I do not know their habits, but I imagine that a great congregation of minor redpolls met, at sunset, before sleep. \* \* # Covid19 Vaccination by region: A Russian mountain. (If by Bubba we refer to the south, then Bubba has done quite well in the Vax, despite all the robust Sind Drang in the press. 61.2% of the United States is completely vaccinated (Double) (CDC data, as is December 16). The increase of 0.1% by day returns. We have broken the important psychological barrier of 61%! Mediocre by world standards, being just below Estonia, and just above the Peru at the Times Financial League Tables as of Monday). Case Count by United States Regions: You keep stroking and boiling. Also, as happened in 2020, would expect a second highest peak, from Omicron if by any other reason. Like minimal, the official narration that  $\hat{a} \in \infty$ Covid is behind us $\hat{a} \notin \infty$ . some people seem not to want Give up the wonderful pandemic, but do you know what? It is overâ € (Bill Maher) is clearly problematic. (This graph is an average of seven days, so the changes in the direction only appear when a train is really rolling.) One of the sources of the idea that Covid is on track, speculating, is the CDC modeling center (whose projections also seem to have been used to justify school reopening). Here is the current version of the graph of the CDC modeling center, which adds the results of eight models in four scenarios, with the last execution ( $\hat{a} \in \alpha$ Round  $9\hat{a} \in$ ) that took place on 2021-08-30, and plot data from current cases (black dotted line) against predictions of aggregate models (gray zone), the average of the predictions of aggregate models (black line). I have highlighted the case data mentioned above in a useful way updated: Case data mentioned above in a useful way updated. Case data mentioned above in a useful way updated the case data mentioned above in a useful way updated. grey area). I wrote: "It's too early to say "Dammit, CDC, your models were broken"; but it's not too early to consider the possibility that they might be. The case data still seem to be trying to get out of the gray area. We'll see. The case data have already been broken down in the grey area (see "Oopsie!"). Since models are the conventional wisdom added, it is not fair to call them propaganda, exactly. However, conventional wisdom is a little dark, and anyone who depended on them to predict that we would return to normal in the early next year should be looking at their assumptions. And this is - I guess- before Omicron! MWRA (Boston-area) wastewater detection, not updated: Still a steep fall on the average, like the last peak. We'll see if it's spicy again, or not. The services area of the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority (MWRA) includes 43 municipalities in Boston and its environs, including not only multiple school systems but several large universities. Covid's spread in schools in general. From CDC: "Community Profile Report" (PDF) "Rapid Riser" counties: Maine improved. Upper Midwest got better. The Acela corridor is a sketch. More smug red, especially in Texas. Weird glows, like flying coal in a forest fire. They land, capture, but — a hope — they jump. The red spot in downtown New York near the Pennsylvania border is, I think, Ithaca (i.e., Cornell.) The previous version: (CDC Community Profile): I have highlighted the states where the "trend" arrow points up in yellow, where is vertical, in orange. (Trend note, either up or down, is marked by the arrow, at the top. Admissions are presented in the chart at the bottom. So it's possible to have an upward trend, but from a very low base.) Mortality rate (Our World in Data): Total: 824,520 823,390. At this rate, I don't think we're going to the Millions of New Year's mark. Excessive deaths (total, not just from Covid). Not updated: Hard to believe that we don't have excess deaths now, but very lucky if so. (CDC explains that there are data delays.) Avid cases in historical sources of variants, with additions from the Brain Trust: the rise of South Africa seems linear, although this is a scale of record. Look at the UK, too. Sorry for the kerfuffle on the left. No matter how it is, it doesn't go away. Biden Administration "Expert in the Senate to inform Democrats about possible rules changes" [The Hill]. "A former leadership officer will inform the Senate Democrats during a closed caucus lunch on Friday about how they could potentially change the rules of the superior chamber by renewing their focus on the adoption of voting rights legislation The head of the Senate majority, Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) said that Marty Paone, former secretary of the democratic conference and parliamentary expert, briefed a group of Senate Democrats on Thursday night and will speak during his caucus lunch on Friday. "Last night several of my colleagues and I met with Marty Paone, an expert in Senate rules who worked under past leadership, including Robert C. Byrd, on how we can restore the Senate so that I can work the way our founders intended," Schumer said. "The Memo: Failure on the big bill would cause a waterfall of problems for Biden" [El Cerro]. "InFrom the bigger picture, there is growing pessimism in democratic circles about the fate of the huge social spending bill [Build Back Better] [and it's not all that huge[. Talks between and Manchin this week could not make significant progress, rather than expose the extent of the gulf that remained. Manchin has never committed to supporting the Build Back Better plan, although it has been significantly reduced to a large extent at its disposal. In the midst of the stagnation, both the White House and Senate Majority Leader Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) have supported previous promises to try to move the legislation before Christmas. And Biden himself seems to be paying attention to voting rights rather than the social spending plan that has been the keystone of his national agenda. On Wednesday, Biden said there was nothing more important than voting rights. The perspective of voting rights is even clearer than ever for Build Back Better, however. Thanks to the unified Republican opposition, the movement on the subject will be impossible without reforming the Senate's filibuster, something Manchin also opposes." Again, this is the party that the Democratic leadership built over many years with a lot of hard work (and specifically on behalf of Manchin and Sinema). It's broken by the design. "The Democrats resume voting rights push towards the end of 2021. But the way of the Senate remains difficult." [NBC]. "The Senate Democrats, eager to save a victory, as they lose hope of ending the Best Construction Act before Christmas, have paid attention to the voting rights legislation. Still, two key obstacles remain: Sens. Joe Manchin from West Virginia and Arizona Kyrsten Sinema. And it is not clear that the Democrats have a way to win their two colleagues to force a vote on the bill, despite the significant changes of other moderates and a frustrated base of votes that cry out loud for Congress to act. Long-lasting frustrations Among the prominent black headers seemed to be surviving while pressing President Joe Biden to do more to encourage the Senate to act. Progressive progressive the groups have accelerated their pressure campaigns, fearing that they will be spared to avoid what they see as an existential threat to democracy. Effort leaders in the Senate, in particular Senator Raphael Warnock of Georgia, have held meetings with colleagues to find a way forward. And moderate as Sens. Mark Warner of Virginia and John Hickenlooper of Colorado, said this week that "sola" are ready to change the Senate rules to allow a vote on an electoral review. But despite this movement, it may not be enough. Do the same and expect a different result? The US Ends Conversations on Settlements with Separated Families By Trump's Border Policy [HuffPo]. The U.S. government withdrew on Thursday from the negotiations in order to put an end to the demands presented on behalf of parents and children who were forcibly separated under the Trump administration as a zero-tolerance border policy. Officials of the Justice Department informed the plaintiffs' lawyers in a conference call that the government would not offer a global agreement in cases of family separation and will defend everyone in court, said Lee Gelernt, a lawyer from the American Civil Liberties Union, who filed one of the lawsuits. The decision comes after reports of a proposed agreement that would include payments of several hundred thousand dollars to each family unleashed the indignation among critics of the Biden administration in Congress and elsewhere. The gas wells that began overheating last year have since become the location of a chemical reaction that continues to heat the garbage, in a well, to temperatures close to 200 degrees, while being beautiful harmful gases and chemicals. He collected air samples in three locations in southern Sweden, where he also used traditional methods to inspect insects for the fish comparison. • The team found traces of DNA of 85 species, including butterflies, beetles, ants, flies and their close relatives •. Several issues related to DNA and air remain nebulae, says Elizabeth Clare, a molecular echologue at the University of York in Canada, who has worked on similar air sampling studies. On the one hand, hue no yctahuku how long an individual insect is made while the DNA persists in the air after it has been taken off. Are the researchers receiving a recent visit or one made months ago? Studies have found DNA intact in permafrost up to 10,000 years after organisms perished. But in other conditions, such as exposure to ultraviolet radiation from the sun, DNA can quickly degrade.
