Keeping secrets can be a delicate matter. Here are what famous figures have said about keeping things secret. "Three people can keep a secret, but only if two of them are no longer alive." –Benjamin Franklin, Poor Richard's Almanack "You must also hide your secrets from yourself if you want to keep them hidden." –George Orwell, 1984 "What people conceal is what defines them, not what they think they are." –André Malraux "A secret at home can be as destructive as rocks underwater." –Dinah Craik, Magnus and Morna "The value of a secret depends on who you need to keep it from." –Carlos Ruiz Zafón, The Shadow of the Wind "Secrets silently reside in the dark recesses of our hearts; they tire of their own tyranny and yearn to be free." –James Joyce, Ulysses "Wisdom lies in not seeking secrets, and honesty in not revealing them." –William Penn, Some Fruits of Solitude "When a secret is exposed, it's the fault of the person who trusted someone with it." –Jean de La Bruyère "Every person has private sorrows unknown to the world; often we label someone as cold when they're just sorrowful." –Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Hyperion "The person who can keep a secret is wise, but not nearly as wise as the one with no secrets to conceal." –Edgar Watson Howe, Country Town Sayings "We dance around in circles and pretend, but the truth sits at the center, aware of everything." –Robert Frost, The Secret Sits "If we could read our enemies' secret histories, we'd find enough sorrow and suffering to end all hostility." –Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Driftwood "Don't do anything secretly; Time sees and hears everything, and eventually reveals it all." –Sophocles "A secret remains a secret until someone promises never to reveal it." –Fausto Cercignani "How can we expect others to keep our secrets if we can't even keep them ourselves?" –François de La Rochefoucauld, Maxims "Three things cannot remain hidden forever: the sun, the moon, and the truth." –Buddha "Wisdom lies in keeping your own secrets; expecting others to do so is foolishness." –William Scott Downey, Proverbs "A secret can be a kind of promise ... or even a prison." –Jennifer Lee Carrell, Interred With Their Bones "An empty secret holds great power." –Umberto Eco, The Paris Review (2008) "Nothing isolates us more than our secrets." –Paul Tournier Secrets have a profound impact on our lives, influencing how we think, feel, and behave. A work of art, such as a painting or sculpture, can evoke a specific emotional response in the viewer, drawing them into the creator's intended state of mind. Conversely, extravagant displays of wealth can convey a message about one's character to others. We are all perceptive individuals, able to discern subtle cues and nuances in those around us. Similarly, objects themselves possess inherent qualities that reveal their nature. As Sidhartha gradually discovered, true wisdom lies not in accumulating knowledge but rather in cultivating a deeper understanding of the self and the world. This entails embracing the present moment and acknowledging the interconnectedness of all things. Wisdom is ultimately about being fully engaged with life, allowing one's thoughts to flow effortlessly, unencumbered by artificial constraints. Secrets have long been woven into the fabric of human experience, influencing our relationships, perceptions, and understanding of truth. Various quotes and phrases highlight the multifaceted nature of secrecy, emphasizing its impact on personal growth, power dynamics, and societal progress. Some views suggest that secrets can be a source of strength when wielded wisely ("Secrets are the ultimate power. Use them wisely.") while others caution about their potential to breed doubt and mistrust ("Secrets can be harmful; they breed doubt and mistrust."). The importance of discretion is underscored by the need for secrecy in certain situations ("A secret shared is a burden lightened."), underscoring the delicate balance between openness and privacy. Philosophical perspectives delve into the nature of truth, pointing out its often complex and nuanced character ("The truth is rarely pure and never simple."). This complexity is also reflected in the role of education and knowledge in societal development ("Knowledge is power. Information is liberating."). In addition to these broad themes, specific quotes offer insights into personal growth and wisdom. For instance, the idea that time reveals all secrets ("There are no secrets that time does not reveal.") highlights the importance of patience and understanding. Meanwhile, the notion that some truths are better left unspoken emphasizes the need for discernment in sharing information. Every secret has its own price to pay; it's only when we dare to uncover the truth that our journey can truly begin. Our deepest desires are often shrouded in mystery, and it's up to us to decide what secrets to keep hidden and which ones to reveal. The path to success is rarely paved with straightforward answers; instead, it's a winding road of trial and error. The power of secrets lies not in their ability to deceive or manipulate, but in the way they can transform our lives when we choose to share them. A secret shared between two people can become an unbreakable bond, while a secret kept hidden can slowly consume us from within. Secrets are like time bombs – they can bring great joy or devastating pain, depending on how they're handled. The true test of wisdom lies not in keeping our secrets safe but in understanding the impact they have on those around us. Ultimately, the key to unlocking the truth lies not in our ability to keep secrets but in our willingness to listen and learn from others. 1. There are two types of secrets: those you want to keep hidden and those you don't dare to reveal. 2. Don't share secrets with people whose trustworthiness and silence you haven't tested yet. 3. Time will eventually expose all secrets, no matter how well-kept they may be. 4. A secret's value depends on who it needs to be kept from. 5. Some things are better left unspoken. 6. Never sharing your secrets can lead to destruction and chaos. 7. Lies and secrets can consume you, damaging what's good in your soul. 8. Everyone has a hidden side that they keep concealed from the world. 9. Telling friends your deepest secrets can backfire and harm you in return. 10. Whoever holds a secret must be careful not to reveal it to others. 11. Secrets exist in the shadows of our souls, hidden away from prying eyes. 12. The truth about yourself is what you hide from others. 13. A person who keeps a secret may seem wise, but one with no secrets is wiser still. 14. I can keep secrets well, but if it's not serious, I often warn people to keep mine too. 15. Even those who appear trustworthy will eventually betray your trust through their actions. 16. Keeping a secret doesn't matter as much as the fact that you kept it in the first place. 17. Having someone's secret can be both powerful and empty, depending on how you use it. 18. Don't trust anyone with your secrets if they have a history of betraying others. 19. There are many hidden truths within us that we don't want to share with others. 20. Sometimes the most difficult things to reveal are the ones you can only share with strangers. 21. It's okay for friends to keep some secrets; true friendship means understanding each other's silence. 22. Some hurtful secrets should remain unspoken, even if it's hard to keep them concealed. 23. Who wouldn't want something no one else knows about to protect their privacy? 24. How can we expect others to respect our secrets when we ourselves have struggled to keep ours? 25. The best way to preserve a secret is often just to pretend it doesn't exist in the first place. All the secrets of the world are hiding in plain sight. There are no secrets better kept than the ones everybody guesses. People are dying to tell you their secrets; it's just a matter of getting the conversation going in the right direction. If you just let people fill the silence, they will let you the most extraordinary things. I sometimes wonder if afterward they remember what they've said. It was almost comforting, this mutual acceptance of our secrets. What one hides is worth neither more nor less than what one finds. And what one hides from oneself is worth neither more nor less than what one allows others to find. Secrecy is best taught by starting with ourselves. Men with secrets tend to be drawn to each other, not because they want to share what they know but because they need the company of the like-minded, the fellow afflicted. There is no friendship that cares about an overheard secret. What is told into the ear of a man is often heard a hundred miles away. Some secrets are meant to be known and once known, you can never forget them. The vanity of being known to be trusted with a secret is generally one of the chief motives to disclose it. The best secrets are the most twisted. But some secrets are too delicious not to share. After all, everybody has secrets and there are some things that nobody knows about you but only you, right? We women talk too much, but even then we don't tell half what we know. Secrets are generally terrible. Beauty is not hidden, only ugliness and deformity. The man who believes that the secrets of the world are forever hidden lives in mystery and fear. Superstition will drag him down. Women are better at keeping secrets, but men are more comfortable with them. I feel that telling my secrets makes me less vulnerable. What would make me vulnerable are the secrets I keep. Secrets have a way of making themselves felt, even before you know there's a secret. Some secrets are like fossils and the stone has become too heavy to turn over. Don't trust people who tell you other people's secrets. Tha' knows tha's got some secrets to share, like findin' a bird's nest. Mary wants to hear about 'er mum, an' Dickon tells 'er it's no worse than knowin' twelve years wi' someone. Tha' can't resist knowin' the truth, like pluckin' out a thorn in tha' side. Tha' gets told, 'You must read every day to yer child,' an' wonders how to make a difference for 'em. Tha's got to believe in yerself, fillin' yer mind wi' faith, or it'll be like wearin' a mask. Some things are just done, wi'out explainin', then forgotten. Mrs. White has some secret candy, an' Nate's intrigued. It's astonishing that secrets can last so long, an' people think they're alone in this world, but someone's always watchin'. Tha' knows what tha'll do before tha does it, like followin' yer river, up an' up. But there's a Germany hidden from view, wi' signs removed or covered up, like for the Jews or Gypsies. The cult that haunted the prisoners was a vast and ancient network of secrets, hidden in dark places and distant wastes all over the world until the return of Cthulhu, who would bring about a new era of darkness. The cult worshipped the Great Old Ones, beings from ages past who had left behind only their dreams to the first men, who formed a cult that had never died. A story can take on many forms when shared, as each person interprets it in their own way. To truly connect with others, one must be aware of who is listening and adapt accordingly. The key to good manners, Eliza, lies not in following specific rules, but in treating all human souls with the same respect: behaving as if you were in Heaven. Horyse ordered a single person to cross into the unknown, sternly warning the Sergeant and Private Rahise against speaking out of turn. Meanwhile, Peregrine longed to share her own story, one that she had waited for the right moment to tell. However, life is full of unexpected twists, as when the Ordinary Princess's plans were foiled by a court chamberlain. On the other hand, doing something kind for someone without expectation of reward can be incredibly fulfilling. Isabel's family and others worked in secret all night with the Castillos, using makeshift rafts to reach their destination. Things that I cannae tell ye yet, but I'll ask nothin' o' ye that ye cannae give me. When ye do share somethin', let it be the truth. I promise the same tae ye. We hae nothin' between us naeow, save respect, maybe room fer secrets, but no' lies. Do ye agree? A person once said, "There's nae secret knowledge; a' that can be found on the shelves o' the public library." But they didnae ken that then. This year, I discovered somethin' strange. My mother was sendin' a Christmas card tae her parents in Ohio. I found oot because I wis lookin' thro' the pile o' cards one day when I had a cold and stayed hame frae school. There it wis, jist like that. The envelope said Mr. and Mrs. Paul Hutchins, and that's them - my grandparents! I love ye in the way somethin' is loved secretly between the shadow and the soul. A man once said, "There wis somethin' funny aboot him," mused his father. "One o' those noo-to-be-talked-about things, an' nae one did talk about it, so I've never found oot what it wis." He didnae think it wis anythin' disgraceful or catchin', jist mysterious. A woman carefully laid false trails until she coodnae find her way intae her secret heart. But the alder she grew, the more she longed fer someone tae laugh at the false trails wi', tae share the secrets. People talked about plenty o' things they werenae supposed tae, but only when they thought naebody wis listenin'. They did it aye, an' they had a special word fer it: Deutscherblick. The "German Look." Ye did the German Look afore ye said anythin' that might make someone suspicious. A woman said, "Pretty women wonder where my secret lies." But they thought she wis lyin', even though she told them it wis in her arms, hips, stride, an' lips. A person saw their future ahead o' them, bleak an' unbearable. They dared no' die, but they would hardly be alive, unable tae marry or think about the subject mase!; lest they discover the deadly secret an' inadvertently let it slip. Alone forever, burdened forever, guilty forever, yearnin' fer death but forbidden tae reach fer it. As he went back hame, Jody kent somethin' more sharply than he ever kent anything afore. He must never tell anyone aboot the rapier. It wis a dreadful thing. To reveal certain information would compromise a delicate balance of truth, as it might shatter a structure that holds it together. This was especially true for Jo, who carried a secret with her and struggled to keep a sense of mystery surrounding herself. Her sister Meg observed this, but knew that the best way to deal with Jo was to use an indirect approach, so she refrained from prying into her affairs for the time being.
