Date of experience: May 17, 2025I contacted Resume Genius regarding my account, which I activated with a 14-day free trial for $2.95. After building my resume, I was unable to download it despite completing the payment, which resulted in me being locked out of my account. I reached out to customer service and was connected with an agent who refused to provide her name. When I reminded her to remain professional, she responded in a rude manner, saying I couldn't afford to buy my resume and called me a derogatory term. I plan to report this incident to the Better Business Bureau (BBB) and the Office of Consumer Protection. Date of experience: May 17, 2025easy to find templates. While some can feel like they're pulling a bait-and-switch, others, like Resumatic, are legit and actually make life easier. Why do people think online resume builders are a scam? A lot of mistrust stems from personal experiences with shady platforms. People often share their frustrations on forums like Reddit, where users describe the deceptive practices of certain resume builders advertise as free, but as soon as you try to download your resume, there's a fee. Frustrating, right? Some platforms only allow you to download a plain-text version for free, pushing you to pay for formatted versions. Users have reported being charged unexpectedly after a "free trial" ends. It feels like a bait-and-switch. Example: Imagine spending hours crafting a resume, only to find you can't download it unless you pay a hefty fee. That's enough to make anyone wary! Pst: For those concerned about potential scams, it's always a good idea to check resources like the Better Business Bureau's Scam Tracker for up-to-date scam reports. Other common issues with less reputable resume builders: Misleading Pricing Structures: They offer a "free" service but charge for basic features like downloads. Poor Customer Support: It can be difficult to get help, especially when trying to cancel a subscription. Non-ATS Optimized Templates: Some resume templates might look nice, but they won't pass through ATS filters, hurting your chances. Is it safe to use online resume builders? Yes, but you've got to choose wisely. Not all sites are upfront about costs or deliver on what they promise. Always vet the platform. Tools like ScamAdviser provide a quick way to check the legitimacy of a website, including resume builders. That's where Resumatic stands out. It offers a transparent pricing model, clear features, and real-time AI support.Watch out for:Hidden fees after a free trial.Subscription models that are hard to cancel.How reputable resume builders workSo, how does a legit builder like Resumatic operate?It's simple, really. You get what you're promised: ATS-friendly templates, real-time keyword suggestions, and an intuitive interface that doesn't try to trick you. Resumatic's key features: ATS-Friendly Templates: Your resume gets through employer screening systems. Real-Time Content Analysis: Receive instant feedback to improve your resume. Everything outstanding Date of experience: May 10, 2025Hello, Thank you for your positive feedback! We truly appreciate you for choosing our service and are delighted to hear that you had an outstanding experience. We look forward to continuing to assist you in your career journey! In today's competitive job market, crafting a standout resume is crucial to securing interviews and landing your desired job. With the increasing reliance on Applicant Tracking Systems (ATS) by employers, many job seekers turn to professional resume writers for help. However, while many legitimate services exist, the rise of digital recruitment tools has also led to a surge in resume writing scams. These scams often prey on the anxiety of job seekers, promising to "optimize" resumes for ATS compliance. This article will guide you through the red flags of these scams and provide tips on how to avoid falling victim to them. Understanding the Scam The typical resume writer scam often begins with an unsolicited message or email, usually on a platform like LinkedIn. The scammer starts by praising your skill set, suggesting that you seem overqualified for your current role, or hinting that they have one or more job opportunities that would be a great fit for you. This flattery is designed to lower your guard and build trust. They then offer to connect with you on LinkedIn, implying that this connection could lead to job opportunities. Once the conversation shifts. Despite their initial praise, they quickly tear down your resume, claiming that it is not ATS-compliant, lacks specific keywords, or is improperly formatted. They highlight these supposed deficiencies, creating a sense of urgency and fear that your resume might be the reason you're not landing interviews. To fix these "issues," they offer their services for a fee, which can vary. While some scammers charge exorbitant prices, others may offer low fees—as little as $30. Even this can be a significant amount, particularly if the scammer is based in another country. These scams are particularly if the scammer is based in another country. of ATS optimization and creating a false sense of urgency, scammers manipulate their victims into paying for services that are either unnecessary or could be easily learned and implemented by the job seekers themselves with a bit of research. Red Flags to Watch Out For Overly Negative Assessments: False Urgency: Excessive or Suspiciously Low Fees: Lack of Credentials: Flattery and Manipulation: Excessive Promises: Lack of Transparency: Tips for Writing an ATS-Friendly Resume If you prefer to optimize your resume yourself, here are some essential tips: Use Keywords: Follow a Consistent Format: Quantify Achievements: Avoid Graphics and Tables: Use Standard Fonts: Proofread Carefully: Finding a Reputable Resume Writer If you decide that working with a professional resume writer is the best choice for you, here's how to find someone reputable: Ask for Examples: Conclusion While seeking professional help with your resume can be beneficial, it's crucial to be cautious of scams. By understanding the red flags and following the tips outlined in this article, you can protect yourself and increase your chances of finding the right job. Remember, a well-written resume is important, but it's not the only factor that determines your success. Networking, interview preparation, and continuous skill development also play critical roles in your job search journey. Call to Action If you or someone you know has been affected by a resume writer scam, please share or repost this article to help spread the word. Together, we can protect job seekers from falling victim to these predatory practices and ensure that everyone has the tools they need to succeed in their career search.
