Paradox and oxymoron worksheet answers. Paradox vs oxymoron examples. Is oxymoron and paradox the same thing. Paradox and oxymoron worksheet pdf. Irony oxymoron and paradox worksheets. What is paradox and oxymoron.

An oxymoron is a short phrase that contradicts itself, while a paradox is a larger sentence, situation or idea that is an apparent contradiction. In this worksheet your student will determine which is used in a variety of passages. The worksheet is good practice for Common Core Standards for Language. Primarily for 11 and 12 grades, it may also be used for other grades as appropriate. Oxymoron, Paradox, Climax, Innuendo and Hyperbole Oxymoron Oxymoron describes the use of two contradictory words placed together to create an effect. The examples given here are commonly used. For example: 'Bittersweet' This oxymoron applies to situations which might benefit someone or something in some way, but can also have negative consequences. 'An open secret.' Paradox A paradox is a statement that seems to be contradictory but may be true in the writer's view. For example: 'You should save money by spending it.' Investing money may be initially expensive, but it could be monetarily beneficial in the long run. 'Dieting makes you fat.' Dieting is supposed to make you lose fat. However, some people believe that in the long run your body will adapt and you will gain weight when you stop. Climax Climax describes a build-up of meaning to a high point. It also describes the point of maximum intensity or turning point in a dramatic plot. For example: 'First England, then Europe, then the World!' 'At first, she was nervous and shy, but she then became alarmed and intimidated before reaching a state of complete terror.' Anticlimax Anticlimax describes the arrangement of ideas in descending order of importance. It is often used to provide humour. For example: 'I fought for God, for country, and for my cat Tigger.' 'When I was young I was Audrey Hepburn, in middle age I was Liz Taylor, and now I'm Nora Batty.' Innuendo Innuendo is a subtle or indirect hint usually with negative connotations. For example: 'Everybody passed the test - even me!' Here the author uses a tone of self-mocking. 'Her beauty equalled the price she paid for her make-up.' Hyperbole Hyperbole describes the use of exaggeration for emphasis. For example: 'She cooked a mountain of food.' By using the word mountain to convey exaggeration, we understand that much more food was cooked than was needed. 'My love is deeper than the ocean.'
