Appium example program for android. Appium android test example. Appium examples. Android studio appium example.

The tool will show various element attributes. When running Appium (whether Appium Desktop or from the command line), ensure that you have started the app / cmd prompt as an administrator. WinAppDriver is often abbreviated "WAD". In Visual Studio 2015 with the test solution open build the test and select Test > Run > All Tests Javascript/node Samples If you want to write tests from scratch, you can choose any programming language or tools supported by Appium/Selenium to write your test scripts. The Windows Driver supports testing of Universal Windows Platform (UWP) and Classic Windows (Win32) applications. I.e. select New Project > Templates > Visual C# > Test > Unit Test Project Once created, select Project > Manage NuGet Packages... Pull and open CalculatorTest.sln under CalculatorTest 2. Of course, you must also include an appropriate app capability, at a minimum (see below). Open the sample folder as an existing project in a Java IDE such as IntelliJ. WAD is bundled with Appium and does not need to be installed separately. E.g. c24c8163-548e-4b84-a466-530178fc0580_scy5mpe3hv32/App Classic Windows App Testing To test a classic Windows app, you can also use any Selenium supported language and specify the full executable path for the app under test in the app capabilities entry. Below is an example of creating a test session for Windows Alarms & Clock app written in C#: // Launch the AlarmClock app DesiredCapabilities appCapabilities = new DesiredCapabilities(); appCapabilities.SetCapability("app", "Microsoft.Windows.Alarms_8wekyb3d86bwe!App"); AlarmClockSession = new WindowsDriver(new Uri(" "), appCapabilities); // Control the AlarmClock app AlarmClockSession.FindElementByAccessibilityId("AddAlarmButton").Click(); AlarmClockSession.FindElementByAccessibilityId("AlarmNameTextBox").Clear(); When testing the application you authored yourself, you can find the Application Id in the generated AppXvs.appxrecipe file under RegisteredUserNmodeAppID node. Locator Strategy Matched Attribute accessibility id AutomationId class name ClassName name Name This driver relies on a project from Microsoft called WinAppDriver, which is an Appium-compatible WebDriver server for Windows Desktop apps (and more in the future). Writing Tests for the Windows Driver You could begin by taking a look at some existing samples: Java Samples 1. Create Test Project Open Microsoft Visual Studio 2015 Create the test project and solution. Appium has the ability to automate Windows PC Desktop apps. Setup To test a Windows app, simply make sure you have turned developer mode on. See below for how these should be used specifically with the Windows driver. In addition to the WAD repo, development of the Appium driver takes place at the appium-windows-driver repo. This inspect.exe tool can be found under the Windows SDK folder such as C:\Program Files (x86)\Windows Kits\10\bin\x86. For example: CalculatorTest 2. The table below shows you which Appium locator strategy you should use to find elements with the corresponding attributes. This tool allows you to see every UI element/node that you can query using Windows Application Driver. Capabilities The Windows driver supports a number of standard Appium capabilities. In the example below, we will author the test script in C# using Microsoft Visual Studio 2015. Also, ensure that you set the deviceName capability to WindowsPC as well. > Browse and search for Appium.WebDriver Install the Appium.WebDriver NuGet packages for the test project Start writing your test (see sample code under [samples]) Universal Windows Platform App Testing To test a UWP app, you can use any Selenium supported language and simply specify the Application Id for the app under test in the app capabilities entry. Requirements and Support In addition to Appium's general requirements: Windows PC with Windows 10 or up Ability to enter Administrator mode Usage The way to start a session using the Windows driver is to include the platformName capability in your new session request, with the value Windows. Below is an example of creating a test session for Windows Notepad app: // Launch Notepad DesiredCapabilities appCapabilities = new DesiredCapabilities(); appCapabilities.SetCapability("app", @"C:\Windows\System32\notepad.exe"); NotepadSession = new WindowsDriver(new Uri(" "), appCapabilities); // Control the Notepad app NotepadSession.FindElementByClassName("Edit").SendKeys("This is some text"); Starting a Session As mentioned above, you should additionally use these capabilities to ensure you are getting a Windows App automation session: platformName: Windows deviceName: WindowsPC app: the appId of the Windows app for testing, or the path to the .exe file Inspecting UI Elements Microsoft Visual Studio 2015 by default includes Windows SDK that provides great tool to inspect the application you are testing. In the Java IDE build and run the test C# Samples 1.
